MOOD BOARD

Noun

"a collection of pictures or text, among other things, that help to evoke a feeling,a project style or concept."

EDITOR'S LETTER

Welcome to issue seven and our first monthly issue!

Our cover image comes from photographer Andrey Lukovnikov with model Exaterina Lukovnikova called R136a1, which if you were to look it up on Wikipedia, it would tell you it is one of the largest and most luminous stars known. We loved the use of light and shadow to give an otherworldly look to the images.

Our back cover features an eye-catching image from Tim Bracey with model Ashley Jacobson. The colourful headress in the images immediately caught our eye when we saw it.

Our ongoing plan is to bring more written content into the magazine, so with three of the pictorials in this issue also have written content, not just a set of images. Photographer Yana Shutova including some words with her images with model Anatasia Bulgakova that give added meaning to the images. Regular contributor Sacha Saxer talks about a series of shoots he did with models Lucy Artmodel, Samantha Mathias and Emma Helena for a lingerie company to highlight how we continue to be a throwaway society, but hopefully things are slowly changing for the better, as people want a more sustainable way of life, right down to their lingerie! Photographer Polina Antonova along with model Alice, produce a moody and atmospheric set of images. Polina also takes us Behind The Shot as she enlightens us about how the idea for the photoshoot evolved.

We have also included a set from a shoot with model Carla Monaco where she evokes the spirit of Bridget Bardot. Virginija Čepulytė is back with model Jade Lyon using her vintage lens to get a great series of images of Jade. We round off the issue with photographer Klara Puzoń and model Volodina with their portrait set. The bold use of colours in the images really caught our eye.

We hope you enjoy the new issue, and now there's less time to wait as our March issue comes out towards the end of February 2023. Keep those submissions coming in via our Kavyar page. You can find all the details on our Submissions page at the back of the magazine.

Most of us don't think too much about the impact our clothes have on our planet. The focus lies too often purely on the price tag attached to the garment and that's why fast fashion labels like Shein are so popular. But the inconvenient truth is that those labels care little about their workers nor how their products affect our planet, dumping returned clothes in landfills instead of recycling them and not being concerned about the toxicity of the chemicals used in creating the clothing.

Wardrobe: Posie Lingerie IG: posielingerie

Words by Sacha Saxer

So, it's great that there's a countermovement, that focuses on environmentally friendly and sustainable clothes produced under fair conditions for the workers. Posie Lingerie is one of those slow fashion labels. They use bamboo silk as a vegan alternative to classic silk, repurposes lace destined for landfills and organic cotton that uses 91% less water to grow (without toxic pesticides, too!) all in an effort to leave as small an ecological footprint as possible. On top of that they only produce small runs as to not end up with lots of excess garments they can't sell and have to destroy.

On top of all of this, Posie's designs look absolutely gorgeous as Emma, Lucy and Sam fabulously show in this pictorial.

My Ghost

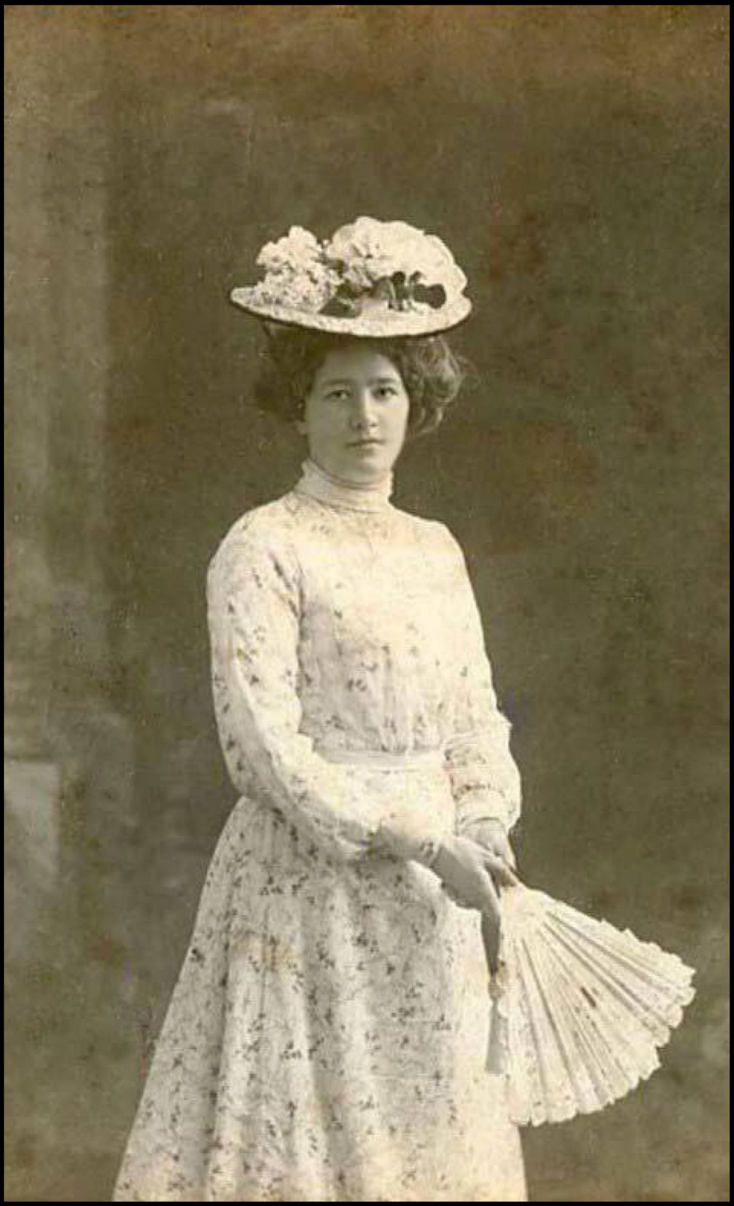
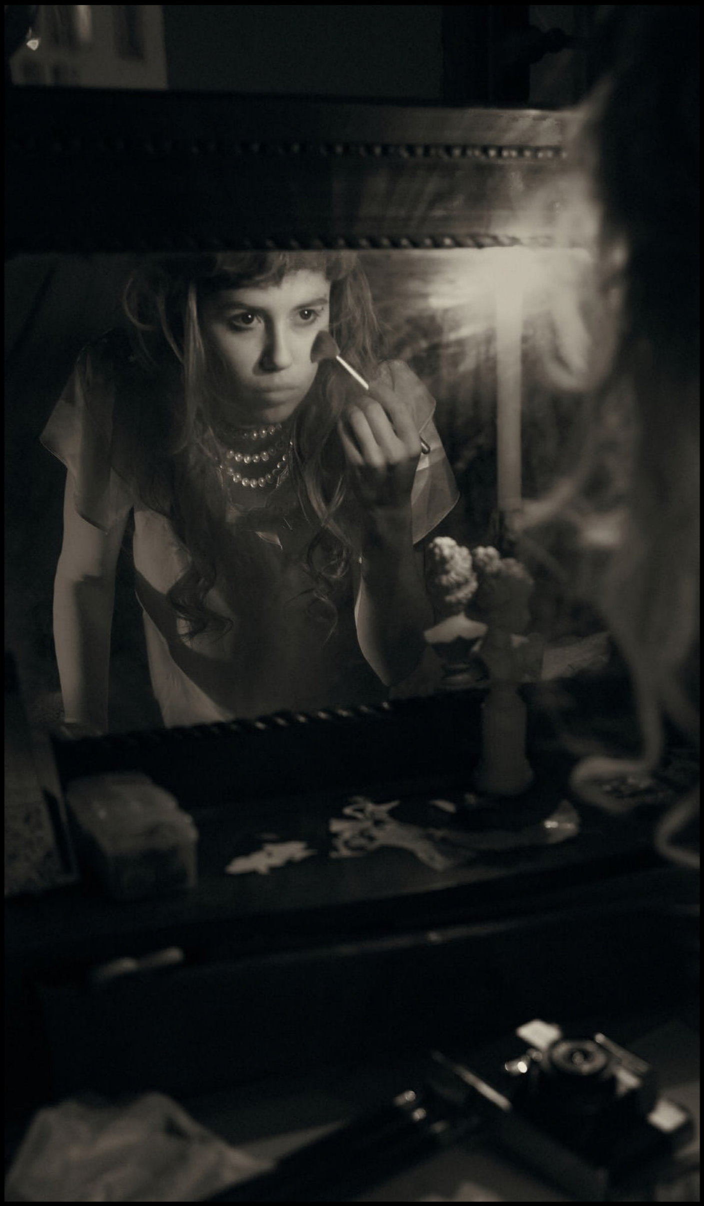
THE STORY BEHIND THE SHOT: MY GHOST

Photographer Polina Antonova takes us behind the scenes on how the concept for her submission came about, and how she went about looking to create the same style and feel on the image that sparked an idea for a photoshoot.

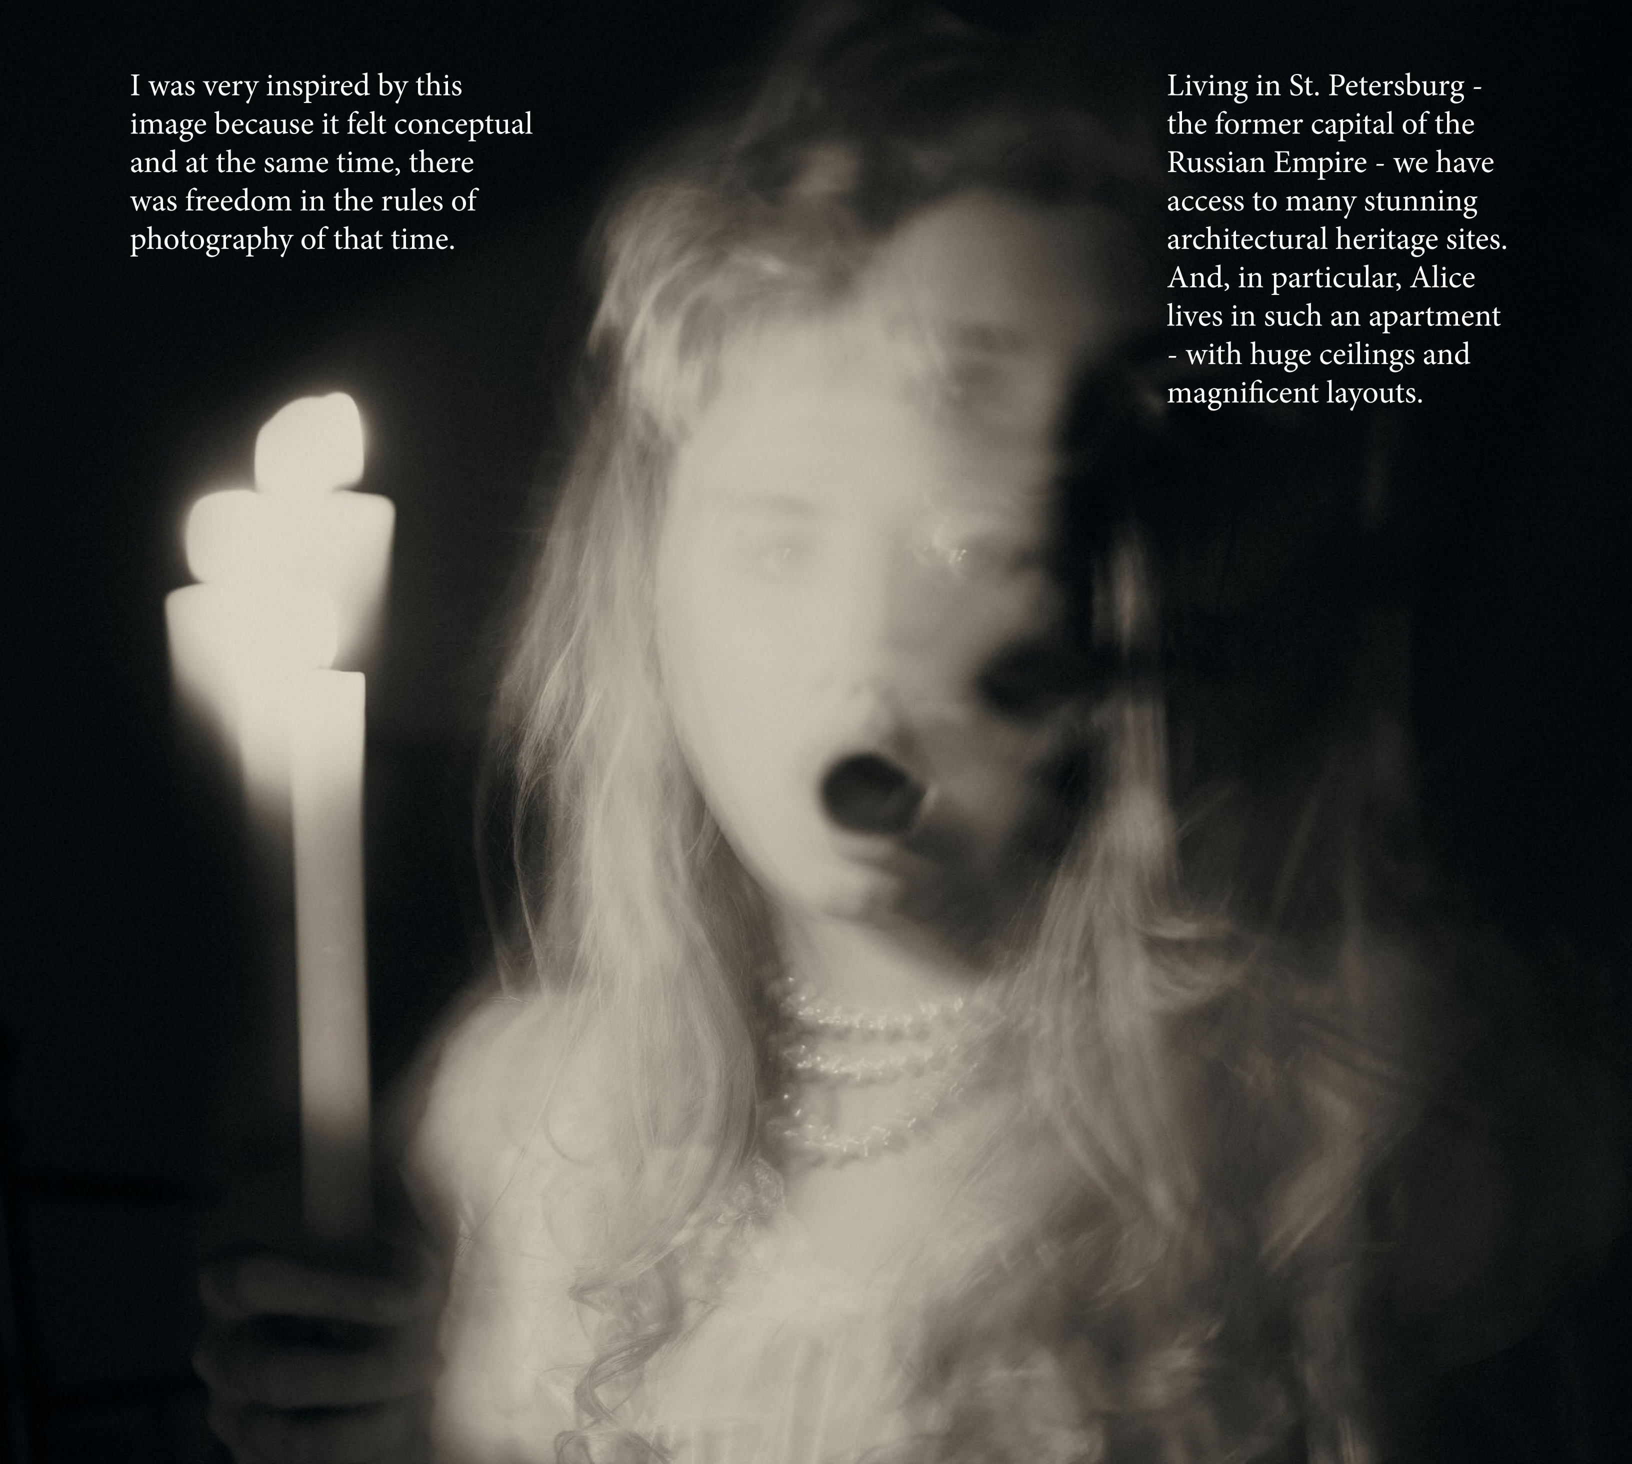
During one of our joint shoots for my photography training, model Alice and I realized that we had quite a lot of creative ideas in common. We often exchange pictures on Pinterest and one day Alice sent me a picture of the late 19th, early 20th centuries, a black and white photograph of a woman.





I was very inspired by this image because it felt conceptual and at the same time, there was freedom in the rules of photography of that time.

Living in St. Petersburg - the former capital of the Russian Empire - we have access to many stunning architectural heritage sites. And, in particular, Alice lives in such an apartment - with huge ceilings and magnificent layouts.



As a result, without thinking twice, we decided to try to recreate the same frame. The only thing we didn't take into account is that the apartment windows overlook what is known as the "courtyard-well". Due to this fact, little light gets into the room, and I had to simulate daylight due to reflection from the window glass. It's good that I had a flash with me! The shots themselves turned out to be beautiful, but they were modern. I took to Photoshop to make my edits, I worked to change the clarity of different plans with masks. It turned out very well and we achieved the result that we wanted.
